Frontline, one of the pinnacles of American journalism, is turning its lens on the controversy over Pebble Mine. "Alaska Gold," will be broadcast on PBS stations around the country Tuesday, July 24 at 10 p.m. (in most markets). We hope you'll consider watching the program and can check your local PBS schedule here. This hour-long documentary by some of America's best journalists will tackle one of the most important conservation issues of our time. The episode will feature some of Bristol Bay's expansive scenery, as well as the people who will be affected most and the magnitude of what's at stake with the proposal to dig the largest open-pit mine in the country on top of the headwaters of the world's largest, most valuable wild sockeye salmon fishery. You can view the trailer here.
